Mutations of the dystrophin gene and the concomitant progressive muscle weakness is the most frequent genetic lesion associated with Duchenne muscular dystrophy (DMD). The C. elegans model has provided powerful experimental tools, but has failed to identify a nematode homologue of the dystrophin gene. Several C. elegans homologues of vertebrate dystroglycan have been cloned and these proteins do not appear to be implicated in muscle function. We have completed a cDNA library screening from a C. elegans whole body cDNA library for dystrophin-like gene products. We have identified six C. elegans homologues of dystrophin: DYNGRA, DYNGRB, DYNGRC, DYNGRD, DYNGRE, and DYNGRV. Two of the cDNAs were independently identified by two different labs. The six C. elegans dystrophin homologues share approximately 30% sequence identity with each other and 45% with the corresponding vertebrate homologues, while exhibiting a 30% sequence identity among each other. By sequence similarity, we propose that the C. elegans proteins are orthologues of the vertebrate dystrophins. We propose to test the following three hypotheses regarding the role of dystrophin in muscle integrity in the C. elegans: (1) The three cysteine-rich (CR) domains of the D
