In Montana, Human Resources Advisors Explain Diversity – But Forget What They Explain to Workers A few weeks ago, I wrote a story about how, for the last 5 years, Montana has been recording instances of racist and sexist discrimination in the workplace, by employers. It seems to me that this kind of information is just a resource for HR-types to point to when they want to say the job market is tight. Since making that article, I read about the new diversity policy for the state of Montana. A friend of mine forwarded me the HR document. Unfortunately, it didn't tell me anything I didn't know, plus it contained some statements that were new to me. The first was a statement about one of the forms of affirmative action, called "Race Plus." Here it is: The governor requested an analysis by the Montana Human Rights Commission regarding the use of one or more race-plus factors to promote diversity in the Montana workforce. The commission's analysis is attached. For more information, please contact Ms. Kay Guthrie, Executive Director, at (406) 270-4112. I know of no such thing as a race-plus. I know about the differences between "race" and "race-plus." But I don't know anything about what the commission said. So, what would the governor do with this information? The policy also said: In a July 30, 2010, Montana Human Resources Specialist issued a memo acknowledging that the State of Montana systematically excludes people from job openings based on race-plus factors and recommending that the Governor's Office develop an affirmative action plan. While the memo acknowledges the State's failure to create a policy to address this issue, the memo provides the Office of Management and Budget with a template for a plan to identify and address the longstanding effects of structural racism, including race-plus-plus factors, throughout the work force. Does anyone know what the memo refers to? I
