As the 2014 FIFA World Cup Brazil™ draws near, players have had over eight million hours of motion capture data collected through our extensive player research programme. We have used this data to develop a technology that will simulate the motion of 22 players on the pitch at once, collating their movements into over five million contact frames. This will allow us to create teams with even more tactics and strategy options to suit every type of match. As we approach the 2014 FIFA World Cup Brazil™, the football community has seen a revolution in the speed and precision of real-time goal celebrations. FIFA 20 introduced a number of new celebrations unique to FIFA, including the Kick It, Joao & Marques, Dédé, Headbutt, Jump and Jumping into a Wall, including the spectacular Double Firecracker Jump and very many others. These celebrations have been blown up to include more complex animation and motion, but we knew we needed to create a motion capture solution that could simulate the unique, incredible, and incredibly fun celebrations with the full power and resolution of real player animation. We knew we wanted to put players who celebrate on stage alongside our awesome motion capture performers, and wanted to see how players can be mocap'd while in motion. With that in mind, we began recruiting 22 of the world's best footballers to try out new techniques and motion capture suits. We have people holding them and accelerating with intense football speed. We have them moving on a treadmill. We have them doing agility exercises as well. We have a lot of people involved in this, and a lot of back-and-forth going on. As we get the data from these captures, we're putting it into the game and making it happen. We're combining the strengths of our motion capture team and world-class animators. Their abilities to create nuanced motions of players with beautiful faces, eyes, expressions and movements will be combined with our incredible motion capture data. We know this technology has potential to revolutionise the way we simulate players. We're starting with gameplay and have more exciting announcements to share as we move forward. To celebrate this release, some of our motion capture performers are competing in the 2014 FIFA World Cup Brazil™ starting on June 12, so keep an eye on FIFA.com for more information. Our motion capture journey can be seen at
